Exchange of Ideas

The writing life includes the exchange of ideas, and those opportunities abound. Recently, on March 13, I attended a student poetry reading at Pensacola State College hosted by Poet Laureate Jamey Jones. If you haven't listened to student poets lately, you should consider going next semester. Students write the truth as they see it, sincere and candid. Listening to the ideas they choose to express gives us a greater understanding across generations. Their presentations always amaze and give me pause for thought.

Our March open mic was especially gratifying as so many Malala contest participants shared their poetry and essays. We welcomed Pen Women Diana Obe and Christine Salome who read their essays, along with our own members Patricia Edmisten, Claire Massey, and Debra Stogner. Julie DeMarko read Joe Wesolowski's poem in his absence. Each participant brought his or her own interpretation to the life and circumstances of Malala Yousafzai.

Patricia Edmisten, Diana Obe, Claire Massey, Christine Salome

The following week, WFLF members Claire Massey, Diane Skelton and Joe Wesolowski read at the Pen Women meeting, accomplishing one of the objectives of the contest: the mingling of members of both groups so we can get to know each other. As writers, our two groups have much in common and much to share with each other, professionally and personally. I especially appreciate Karen Morris for spearheading this endeavor. Note: I compiled the work of those who wished into a Special Edition of the Legend. If you would like a digital copy, please email me at andrea48@aol.com.

After the Pen Women meeting, several of us walked across Ferdinand Plaza to the Pensacola Museum of Art for Allan Peterson's reading from his new book of poetry This Luminous: New and Selected Poems. Peterson, who divides his time between here and Oregon, chaired the art department at Pensacola State (then Junior) College for many years and has published six volumes of poetry. I enjoyed his clear and straightforward style.

It is not lost on me that we are fortunate to have a wide range of talent right here: three events within seven days and a five-mile radius. From the fresh voices of youth and the mature voices of those in the middle to the stellar voice of a well-respected and successful published poet, we are surrounded by poetry and ideas.

WFLF Writers Weekly Workshops

MONDAY POETRY led by Julie DeMarko meets from 6 ~ 8 p.m., Mondays at the Cultural Center. Like the "wild writing" workshop she led for two years, the goal is to practice writing and, in the end, find the path to authentic poetry.

WEDNESDAY PORTFOLIO & EXCHANGE SOCIETY

~ The Portfolio & Exchange Society Critique Group meets every Wednesday, 9:30-11:30 a.m., at the library of the First Presbyterian Church on Gregory Street in Pensacola. We're a lively group looking for writers who have a project for a year – no matter the genre, memoir, poetry, fiction, nonfiction – 12 months to complete a project. Since the conception of the group in January 2014, four members have published books and a fifth writer's manuscript is being finalized for press. Plus, the participants are notorious for exchanging writing tips, novels, paintings, and garage sale items. For more information contact dianeskelton@att.net

A Gift to Our Community

Many of you have known Ora Wills much longer than I have, which is at least twelve years. It has been my pleasure to work with her on the student poetry contest, to read at her program “When Black Folks Was Colored” twice, to attend Julie DeMarko’s Wild Writing workshop with her for several years, and to share lunch occasionally. What I know about Ora is she’s a beautiful writer, forthright, humble, and smart. I also know she works in our community at many objectives, and one important goal of hers is to bridge the gap between races. I took the liberty of sharing excerpts of articles written by two well-known local journalists who appreciate Ms. Wills.

“Consider this sentence. ‘I railed against such a fate, feeling abandonment and isolation as we toe danced a mad dance that must end with a gaping flower-decked hole.’ Consider the imagery: It’s a swift description of a young woman struggling with the burden of caring for her dying grandmother. With the flick of a pen, the author twists one of time’s cruelest mortal chores into a swirling waltz — that ends, unceremoniously, with a ‘gaping hole.’ Such is the skill of Pensacola author Ora Wills in her recently published memoir titled “Fish Head Soup and Sassafras Tea.” They are the stories of a black girl growing up in “the country” along Carpenter’s Creek in segregation-era Pensacola” (Andy Marlette. Pensacola News Journal. 2/22/2019)

“Ora Wills has spent much of her life educating the young and writing about the history of the old. She's an educator, an editor, an activist and historian. She's still working to make our community a better place for all. . . . and though she's still an avid reader and a member of a couple of book clubs, she still isn't content to rest. Her next challenge is to work to close the gap in test scores between white and black students. ‘I'm trying to launch an assault on that,’ she said. ‘We really need to get parents engaged with their child's education and development early on.’ She's still in the planning stage on the initiative, but she is dedicated to improving the education of all children. She always has been. Which is why Ora Wills has made Pensacola a better place for all. We're lucky to have her as our own” (Troy Moon. Pensacola News Journal. 11/21/2015).

I join Moon and Marlette in my admiration of Ora Wills.
