PRESIDENT'S REPORT

I hope you all had a wonderful July 4th holiday celebrating our country's birthday and are enjoying the lazy, but sometimes hot days of summer.

Hard work is in progress in planning a Writing & Book Festival on November 8th and 9th, so save the date. This will be a joint effort by our organization and the Gulf Coast Authors. More info to come, so stay tuned.

Our open mics have been going well; last month we honored our student poetry contest winners. The three winning students were Serena Townsend, Patrick Beeman, and Laylonna Battle, all from Ferry Pass Middle School. Special thanks go to Catherine Mabry, their teacher. On July 16, best-selling romance author Lenora Worth will present the program, after which we will go into the open mic phase with each person having five minutes to read poetry, prose or tell a story or whatever.

We have received some great submissions for our upcoming Emerald Coast Review and this issue, volume 20, will follow in the fine tradition set by the previous 19 editions in showcasing some of the best of our local/regional authors. Publication is set for November. We do keep some copies of our previous editions and editions of our other publications, and occasionally I get calls from people whose works were published many years ago, sometimes as a child in the children's poetry books. They have lost the book, and often I am able to provide a copy for them.

Visit our website at www.WFLF.org and visit our Facebook page by typing in West Florida Literary Federation in the FB search bar. Tell me what you think: estanford@cox.net or 850-449-6771.

Ed Stanford, President

Thank you . . .

. . . if you submitted to the Emerald Coast Review Volume XX. Work is in progress and writers and artists who have been accepted will be announced August 1.

Feel free to share your travels, news, and musings. I hope to hear from you soon with your writing for the Legend.

2019 West Florida Literary Federation
Middle School Student Poetry Contest Winners Recognized

The West Florida Literary Federation was proud to recognize the winners of their 2019 Student Poetry Contest. The students were recognized at the Open Mic night held on June 18, 2019 at 400 South Jefferson Street Pensacola Fl. The three winning students were; Serena Townsend, Patrick Beeman and Laylonna Battle from Ferry Pass Middle School.

The students' families and teacher, Mrs. Catherine Mabry, attended the event with the regular open mic attendees, and it was a full house. The 2019 prompt for the poetry contest was "Tell me." The poems could be any length. The three winners were invited to read their poems to the open mic audience. Ed

Stanford, WFLF President, and Lisa Rawson, Board Member, presented each student with $25 gift cards and a beautiful plaque from the West Florida Literary Federation.

The heartfelt response to the students' poems by all attendees was contagious and very supportive. Attendees Brenda A. Coleman, a teacher at Warrington Middle School, and Peter Shelton, a military officer, spoke with me after the event. They found the students' poems "captivating, deeply rooted, thought-inspiring," and said "society needs to listen more to young people because their words revealed how consciously aware middle school students are today." Ms. Coleman said she will definitely be back to participate in more Open Mic nights and was inspired to consider offering a poetry club at her school next year. Many listeners expressed their appreciation and stated they were moved and touched by the event and will be looking forward to next year's student poetry contest winners' poems.

The 2020 West Florida Literary Federation Student Poetry Contest prompt will be announced in the fall of 2019 and open to all middle school age students in Escambia and Santa Rosa counties. More information about the West Florida Literary Federation can be found on the website www.wflf.org. The WFLF Open Mic night is held every third Tuesday at 400 S. Jefferson St. Pensacola, FL and is open to the public.

Defying Disconnection: My First Visit to the West Florida Literary Federation

In an age of Twitter wars, fake news, and all-around divisiveness, authentic human conversation is hard to come by. We in late modernity are (sometimes rightly) assailed by cultural critics as being inflicted with self-induced absence of human connectedness more irreversible than time itself. Though the miracle of modern technology has given us access to more of the world in an instant than the ancients could have hoped to experience in a hundred lifetimes, we are condemned as disenchanting, distracted, disinterested, and--most damningly--disconnected.

However, a few weeks ago, I was given significant reason to doubt the claims of disconnection.

Perusing websites for a local arts scene that I could get involved with, I stumbled across the website for the West Florida Literary Federation. Within five minutes of being on the website, my payment for membership and information form were already done. I was eager to get involved.

A few days later, my wife and I attended the monthly open mic night; immediately, I knew that I made a good decision. On this particular evening, the WFLF hosted a local student poetry competition. A group of parents and their children as well as members of the school leadership were present. Unfortunately, the students were already finished with their readings; however, I watched with happiness as one of the school's leadership stepped up to the podium and discussed the importance of poetry for the children of our community.

After the awards were distributed, the open mic night officially started. Members of the federation stood for five minutes at a time, sharing their art. Between readings, the atmosphere was light and--almost--familial. A new member read for the first time, and seasoned members read as they had done for years. Multiple times, their heartfelt readings filled me with joy and wonder, heightened by the rare mixture of generations, genders, classes, and races who had all come together with their art to try and help one another conceive of a deeper experience of that slippery worm we call Reality.

After the open mic officially ended, multiple people introduced themselves to me and made me feel very welcome to the group, encouraging me to get involved in as many ways as I would enjoy. I left that night after open mic feeling more attuned to my community; it was almost a religious experience, beautifully ordinary and sublime.

Walking back to my car in the night, I was already eager for next month's meeting. After reflecting a bit, what I took away from the first meeting was this: Disconnection is a myth. If we look for them, opportunities for genuine human coalition are all around, and I found mine on the second floor of the Pensacola Cultural Center.

I would like to thank all of the good people at the West Florida Literary Federation for making me feel so welcomed, and I look forward to many more incredible nights in the future.

POETRY

Wind

I listen to the voice of the wind born when the sun

warms the land and sea unevenly. The taste of ocean salt and desert sand lingers tonight.

Wind covers my face, bends trees.

I thought it invisible
until I saw it hovering on the horizon,

leaning into the sunlight
until night covered it with darkness.

It stood still,
like a tree under curious stars.

Henry Langhorne

Driving to the Hospital One Morning

While I barely listened to the car radio and a muffled pop song, a voice sang clearly:
Life is more than who we are.

I could not forget the words as I weaved through morning traffic and waited patiently for the first time at crowded intersections.

That morning as I made my rounds through corridors of wheelchairs bodies stacked like cracked vases,
some thin as a stalk of wheat,
past numbered rooms with ice blue walls,
rooms drenched with the smell of urine

and faded flowers, and empty beds stripped of their sheets and cold bodies—where art is short and suffering long—

I wished I could empty their rooms of fear and find the song on the radio I heard that would make them smile and sing along.
